Hello friends, you know ... this subject was discussed and dealt with in another forum, I find interesting the case, I invite you to read it. What is the cause for the strange occurrence by way of cannon blasts that year after year, are heard in different parts of the world? centuries, historians and travelers have left a written record of their experiences with mysterious rumblings from the sea, mountains and even the sky. sounds like storms, without the presence of clouds , like guns, but no battle involved. In ancient Greece, Aristotle attributed this noise to thunder remote indigenous tribes angry Gods. In current times there are testimonies of those who have faced this phenomenon unknown in most cases ignored. Meriwether Lewis, who in June 1808 was located 100 miles from the Rocky Mountains, accompanied by his friend William Clark, were surprised by a strange noise coming from the mountains, as recounted in his chronicle books. "is heard at different times of the day and the night ... and consists of a single stroke or in 5 or 6 discharges in quick succession. It is strong and resembles the sound of a piece of artillery regulatory six pounds. " However there were no guns in that part of North American West at the time. enigmatic Those noises have their own identity to be called, according to the country of origin. Belgians call them "the fog hipeos" In India they are called " Barisal Guns " In Italy they are called "brontidi" India, a country where most cases have occurred, evidence collected, mostly from the Ganges delta. Say sounds coming from the south and southeast and occur more frequently between February and October, the same guns that are associated with and often appear or be in the form of a single detonation or succession of 2 or 3. Experts hypothesize sounds that are produced by nature, the unknown mechanism to be of the same. OTHER MYSTERIOUS NOISES IN THE WORLD. few more of these enclaves is Lake Seneca, Ohio (USA), where the natives speak of sounds distant. Later American settlers identified with the explosive barrel. In Northern Ireland these detonations are also heard throughout the year, around Lough Neagh, a lake of 225 km of extension that formed due to volcanic eruptions . these mysterious sounds do not always identify with guns. Elsewhere melodious sounds are perceived, even musicals. Shoshone Lake, within the Yellowstone National Park (USA), where witnesses claim to have heard a sound that resembles a harp vibration or noise cable Telegraph oscillating regularly and quickly. The sound is said, runs the entire area. Sinai Peninsula in lies the sandy slope of Jebel Nagus, extending along the west coast. It is said that there have heard sounds like musical notes. Legend has it that music produced a wooden gong monastery buried, sound is described as produced by a harp or resulting from a finger rubbing the wet edge of a glass. sands There are other sound news in Reg-Ravan region north of Afghanistan, in the Peruvian plains of Arequipa and in the eastern part of the U.S. state of Nevada, where a hill 6 km square produces a deafening sound reminiscent of telephone cables vibration caused by the Wind force. are proposing an alternative for these events. Scholars postulate that the cause for these sounds would be given that somehow the events are recorded in time-sounds and images-and at certain times become noticeable. A future is expected to be achieved conduct more studies on this phenomenon and to find the cause for these mysterious "phantom sounds." Summer 1965. East of the island of Sakhalin. Members of the crew of a Japanese merchant, sailing peacefully through its waters, when, shortly before reaching the coast, a powerful start hearing rumblings that last until they reach their destination. The blasts are similar to guns and boaters think can be made naval maneuvers near by the Soviets. But no boat crosses them and where the shooting came believe, is only occupied by the calm waves of the sea. 'It must be some new kind of aircraft exceeding the sound barrea he reasoned to himself the captain, and to others. Two months later, the same ship sailing the west coast of Hokkaido Island and eastern Siberia, and the detonations occur again without anyone of the crew get to find out their origin. The captain, piqued, decided to confirm his theory of aircraft, and asks a friend, Soviet naval officer of Vladivostock, what he thinks about it. The officer denies than airplanes or bombs and invites you accompanied him to the shores of Lake Janka, on the Chinese border. Both men are on leave, and the Japanese Navy accepts the invitation. 'Do not think I deny than airplanes or bombs because it is some secret military official told the Soviet his friend, once in place. But, sh .. There you go. The Japanese Navy did not have to force his ear, then immediately returned to produce the explosions that he was beginning to know. 'Do not think we do not know of these detonations, followed Soviet-explaining his friend, but totally unknown origin. The truth is that it is not of any aircraft or appliance, unless, though, that the case of flying saucers. Not content with the testimony of his friend, who did not know if he was joking, our Japanese Navy decided to investigate on their account the phenomenon and thus encountered several statements divergent but overlapping in that no one knew what they might be. 'Indeed, this phenomenon is not new, he said one of them, there even before who invented the reactors, nor scientists know what it is. I'll tell you that even the British Ministry of Defense began an investigation, but had to give up because they knew they would not get anywhere. -This is possibly a natural phenomenon, said a specialist. But we do not know whether to locate in the air, on land or at sea. This phenomenon has been called scientifically as "invisible guns" or "Barisal guns" (name from a village near the Ganges). No one ever found out its origin and many have been those who, throughout history, have been described as unique and mysterious noise. English travelers in Indian Sundarbans gaps, the Colonels Godwin Austen and HS Olcott, in Bhutan (1865) and Barisal, Chilmari and Brahmaputra (1895), respectively, and Charles Sturt, in Australia, in the same issue that led him to discover Darlin and Murray rivers in 1828-1829, just to name a few. This mystery, which originates in many parts of the world, is also known as "Sand drum" for occur in areas totally deserted. Marco Polo, in his "Book of Wonders", says he has heard them being in the Gobi desert. The noise was persistent and annoying and began to feel ill. When asked the locals what it was, they replied that they were the spirits of the earth speaking in his mysterious language. He was told that unless he was a sorcerer, never know interpret. That was his way of announcing the future and "talking to the stars". The man should not listen too long as these were crazy. Darwin also witnessed a similar event in your trip to Chile. The explanations given by the natives, was exactly the same as that of Marco Polo. Certain fringes of the Sahara desert they also sound their "drums" almost daily. The beaches are another place where these sounds make their appearance. In Hawaii, the noise is different from the other because it is not exactly a rattle, but rather a rattling at high speed rattle or a persistent whistle, which comes and goes. In the deserts of Kalahari, South Africa, Indians pay tribute for a long time, ritual techniques. Dr. AD Lewis, could see for himself in 1935. Southern Egypt, the sand drum occurs naturally and regularly. Physicist RA Bagnold, lived in a very remarkable phenomenon: "It happens without one expect it. On a quiet night. First I heard a buzz as deaf and intense that I had to shout to make myself heard my teammates. Soon other sound sources of indiscernible origin, joined chords initial concert. And gradually created a kind of harmony, nasty and sickening at the same time, punctuated by a small drum roll an astonishing rate regularly. That strange chorus lasted at least five minutes. Then, for a few seconds, there was only the drum. And finally, suddenly, confusion noise stopped and we wondered if we had been the victims of a hallucination. " Whatever which they were these noises, explosions and drumming, the truth is that you are listening from time immemorial and anywhere planet. Demons? UFOs?? Spirits?? Caprices? Mother Nature? Who knows.
